

To the Commissioners:

In this matter, I expect the Federal Communications Commission to act, not simply as a follower of international trend, but, instead, as a regulatory agency of a world leader, the United States of America. Should the Commission act to further weaken the requirements for licensing of its amateur radio operators or should the Commission help to set the United States of America above all other nations, not only in terms of the Morse Code skills of its amateur licensees, but in terms of their technical and operating abilities as well. This burden is, indeed, upon the shoulders of FCC Commissioners. I request that you reject the subject petition in its entirety.

Respectfully submitted,
William K. Mabry, N4QA
